

Kant's Ethics of Duty

What do we owe one another?

George Matthews, Pennsylvania College of Technology

2020

Kant's question

- All of the moral theories we have looked at so far have tied morality to something else -- culture, God, human nature, personal advantage, the social good, happiness...
- But don't moral demands override all of those at times?
- Having a moral conscience means that sometimes we can see that we just shouldn't do something no matter what else is telling us that we should.

Kant's question is:

How can we possibly step back from all of our other concerns and act based only on what is right?

The Moral Ideal

"Two things fill the mind with ever-increasing wonder and awe . . . the starry heavens above me and the moral law within me."

Immanuel Kant, Critique of Practical Reason

Setting aside all thoughts about the real world and real human beings,

1. What might a morally perfect world look like?
2. Why should we try to live up to this ideal?
3. How can we go about doing that?
4. What would the content of morality be?

Why should we strive for moral ideals?

How can we live up to moral ideals?

An important distinction

conditional

unconditional

Credits

Built with:

Rstudio

xarigan html presentation framework

Photos by:

download this presentation or print it

editorial suggestions and comments: requires a (free) GitHub account.